The can be one of two parts of speech depending on how it's used:

- When it comes before a noun to refer to a specific something or to create a proper noun, it's a definite article.
- The can also be used as an adverb to modify a verb, an adjective, or a group of words.

There are eight parts of speech in English: nouns, pronouns, verbs. The situation is reversed when the thing in question is replaced by a pronoun; then the only correct variant is the one with the preposition. Sentences employing the pattern all of [pronoun] can almost always be rephrased in such a way that the pronoun does not follow all correct all of them.
